Died on Tuesday evening at 8:30 Mr. James Burson, of malignant jaundice, at the age of 85 years, at the home of

A lively citizens' meeting was held at the Masonic hall on Tuesday evening that has promise of something for Fredericktown in the shape of an opera house. The meeting was entirely informal and everyone present had something good to say about the project. Mr. Charles Pink, representing the Masons, said that they had investigated the matter thoroughly from their standpoint and had decided as a lodge that the project was too large for them, and that they were not financially able to have anything to do with it. He then turned over to the citizens all the data gathered together thus far. The substance of their investigations is that an opera house, a brick structure can be built and the land purchased in a centrally located position and one that will comfortably seat 750 people at approximately a cost of $15,000. The plans presented were perhaps not what would eventually be accepted but they would serve as a working basis to finance the project. How to raise the money was next discussed. Mr. J. B. Foote suggested that the Weaver property be purchased and allotments be made and sold and thus raise the money and build up Fredericktown at the same time. Dr. Ackerman recommended that a stock company be formed and people be solicited for stock for the public good and not for the dividends that might be made. Mr. J. H. Denman suggested that the Wayne, Morris, Berlin and Middlebury townships unite and build an auditorium, as such a meeting place is for the benefit of all the people in this vicinity and that these townships issue bonds to cover their proportion of the expense. It was finally decided that each person present make an effort to find out how much stock he can sell to his friends provided the stock company plan be adopted. The meeting then adjourned until a report on these efforts can be made.
